

DEUTSCHLAND CAPTAIN MAY VISIT WASHINGTON

Probably Will Drive First Nail Into Mature Charity U-Liner.

If Capt. Paul Koenig and his U-boat Deutschland arrive in time as privy advisers from abroad indicate—Washington will have an opportunity to shake its head with the unassuming hero of German romance and watch him put the final nail into a wooden replica of his fame for the benefit of widows and orphans in the Fatherland.

Emitting a local sculptor, has just finished the task of carving the likeness of the Deutschland into a heavy oak board, feet in length, for the great charity bazaar which sympathizers with the civil powers intend to hold at Convention Hall from February 5 to 10, and which will provide it with an armor of iron nails at 10 cents a nail.

At the close of the bazaar the committee in charge plans to present the historical model to some museum, either in Washington or in Baltimore, the first American port of the Deutschland, while a 10-cent containing the names of the people who helped to build it by paying 10 cents and nailing the hull, will be given to Capt. Koenig.

AERONAUTIC EXPERTS URGE STANDARD PARTS

Fate of Industry Dependent on Accessories, They Declare.

While more than $50,000,000 worth of aeronautic apparatus will be built and marketed in this country during the coming season, the industry must undergo considerable remodeling to insure its success, it was decided at conferences held during the past week and at New York City, at which were present Howard E. Coffin, chairman of the Industrial Preparedness Committee of the Naval Consulting Board; Alan R. Hawley, president of the Aero Club of America; Henry Woodhouse, army and navy officers, and representatives of the largest airplane parts makers. It is said to be questioned whether the industry will be brought to a head with considerable rapidity during the first Pan-American Aeronautics Exposition in Grand Central Palace, New York, February 8 to 15.

This country becomes involved in war, airplanes will be needed in great numbers, but under present conditions it could be impossible to supply anything like an adequate number of aircraft on short notice, because airplane makers are dependent upon the parts and accessories makers and helpless without them, and the present lack of standardization of sizes and materials makes it impossible for even the largest of parts makers to manufacture with efficiency.

The plan adopted to remedy this difficulty, and one which, it is believed, will permit the aeronautic industry to make unhampered strides, is to place the matter in the hands of the Society of Automotive Engineers, the body that standardized the automobile industry when it was in chaotic condition some years back.

'HOLD THROUGH' IS NEW CRY OF GERMAN PEOPLE

Karl Von Wiegand Tells of United Will to Combat Food Shortage.

By KARL H. VON WIEGAND.

(International News Service.)

New York, Jan. 20.—"Durchhalten, aushalten, Maul halten!" In literal English, "hold through—hold out—hold in (or hold tongue)." More freely translated, "Endure, stick it out, keep mouth shut." These words of Ballin, the great German captain of industry, to me some months ago, have become famous through all Germany, and even Austria-Hungary, Bulgaria and Turkey.

It has become the slogan of the German people. It is taught to the children in school. I have heard youngsters of 7 shouting it on Unter den Linden. Berlin had particular reference to the economic conditions in Germany, which we were discussing. And nothing better exemplifies the spirit of Germany under the tremendous economic pressure of the "ring of iron" surrounding it than this slogan.

With this spirit even among the little children, Germany will get through till the next crop comes in. The German people may have a hard winter. There will be privation, perhaps some suffering. These will not be among the soldiers on the front, but among the civilian non-combatant population, who make great sacrifices for the men who fight.

Blockade Hits Young and Old. In its effect the British blockade, which the Germans persist in calling "illegal" and "inhuman," hits especially hard the very young and the very old. There is a scarcity of rich milk, of cream, of butter and so-called "butter fats," so necessary to growth and health in tender years.

Old people require the most nourishing foods to keep up slowly waning strength, to resist disease and withstand the ravages of oncoming years.

Germany will get through. The Germans assert this officially and my own observations and impressions lead me to the same conclusion independent of that assertion. There may be people whose hunger will not be entirely stilled, but there will be no starvation. It may call for fortitude, but history shows that the German people have that in abundance. And they have it today.

"Can Germany hold out economically?" The question is more than ever to the fore now that the reply of the allies has once more solidly united the German people and "war to the hilt" may be expected. It has been asked of me more often than any other question since my return to New York the end of December.

Without assuming to have the ability to read the veil that conceals the future, my impressions, based upon observations, are that Germany can and will hold out through this winter and spring and after that will, so far as food is concerned, be in position to hold out indefinitely. My observations have not been solely from the Adlon Hotel, the Vanderbilt or the Biltmore, of Berlin, as have been those of some who have written books on Germany.

Food Standard Topic in Germany.

I have criss-crossed Germany west to east and north to south many times, perhaps more often than any other foreign correspondent during the war. Whether riding on trains, on street cars, in the subway, in elevators or visiting smaller towns, I have made it a point to put questions about food.

"Food" and "What I had to eat today" is close to the heart and "tummy" of every German today. It is a standard topic of the day. You hear it everywhere, behind you and around you in the theater and opera, in the streets cars, trains and subway.

You hear little children on the streets telling with great pride to arouse the envy of less fortunate youngsters, "Oh, we had a piece of goose today," or "We had this or that to eat." I have visited the markets and have watched the "standing lines" for butter. My impressions have been based on such observations. After all, it is not the menus in the big hotels, but what the working people have to eat which will decide the all important question whether Germany will hold out in the matter of food.

Many times I have been told in answer to my inquiries that it was difficult to obtain food, required much "hustling," but "we manage to get enough to get along" usually, was the concluding phrase of the replies. And that best characterizes the food situation in Germany today, "get enough to get along on."

SORORITY MAIDENS CAPTURED BY CUPID

But Only Three of the Five G. W. U. Girls Are Sure of Their Men.

Cupid has captured the heart of five girl members of Pi Beta Phi Sorority at George Washington University, and before many months wedding bells will be ringing.

Ah, but hark! There is an element of uncertainty. While five are willing, just as was old Bunker, the wedding bells may ring for only three of the girls. But, ah, then, the course of true love never did run smooth.

Several nights ago the members of Pi Beta Phi, one of the most exclusive sororities at the university, held an "engagement party."

Twenty-five pounds of candy, the best chocolates, of course, had been sent by the five young men as a token of their delight that the sorority harbored such charming hours. The twenty-five pounds was devoured without a blink and the impressive ceremonies went through with great eclat. Five blushing girls admitted that they really were to be married.

But when it came to publication of the names, only three of the girls said they were absolutely sure of their men. The other two feared that their "fiances" might have been "kidding," they had heard of that having been done before. Give out the names of the young men? Why, they wouldn't think of it—why, not until the day of the wedding, ay, not until they were in the taxi ready to ride to the church.

But three of the girls are certain. Here they are, along with their fiances—Miss Elizabeth Wilbur, daughter of Dean William Allen Wilbur, of the university, and Cadet Lyman Parks, U. S. A.; Miss Elsie Nichols and James Burch, and Miss Lela Howard and Robert Wood, a member of Zeta Mu Fraternity from Oklahoma.

SEWING CIRCLE MAKES CLOTHES FOR BELGIANS

The Sewing Circle of the District of Columbia Belgian Relief Committee met Friday when twenty-four women kept four sewing machines running until after 9 o'clock. On the day before the women had cut out all the garments and planned all the work so that there was no time lost in the making up of the garments out of the material they had purchased. During the week the committee received $112 for shoes, there being a great demand for shoes for the destitute children.

To date the committee has sent 156 boxes of clothing, and solicits contributions of money, materials and shoes from every one in sympathy with these suffering people.
